Southwest Passage Plans

Including the harbours and anchorages of southwest England, from Christchurch to the Isles of Scilly

Southwest Passage Plans

This hardback book covers the area from Christchurch to the Isles of Scilly.

It aims to provide a reference to create passage and cruising plans before departure and find alternative options if weather conditions change.

The harbours and many of the anchorages along this coastline are also covered. Admiralty Chart extracts are used in combination with text and photographs to enable a safe approach and entry. Where possible, these are contained to a single spread within the book, allowing it to be readily accessible and "hands-free".

Shelter and Supplies
The best places to shelter on the coast are all located at the harbours and inlets. Brixton, Bournemouth, and Poole are the most sheltered harbours. Bournemouth is the best for the eastern approach, as it is a long narrow inlet. Bournemouth can also provide a good shelter for a vessel in a gale. The harbours are also the best places to get supplies. Bournemouth has a large supermarket, a petrol station, and a post office. Poole has a large supermarket, a petrol station, and a post office. Brixton has a large supermarket, a petrol station, and a post office.

Hazards
The hazards of the western coast of the Isle of Wight are listed in a table. The hazards are listed in a table. The hazards are listed in a table.

Distances

Robert Bailey, a co-author of "Cruising Galicia" and previously a Yachtmaster Instructor, returns to his sailing roots in his second book.

"Southwest Passage Plans" takes a look at the coastline where he learnt his trade, when traditional navigational techniques meant careful planning was necessary. It was also a path to a successful cruise for navigator and crew.
